These prospective analyses were conducted in order to assess the contribution of alcohol intake to coronary heart disease incidence and mortality and to disentangle the roles of amount and frequency of drinking in the association between alcohol use and coronary heart disease. The first prospective analyses, on 3,066 men and 3,447 women from the 1970 Coronary Drug Project (CDP) population, showed that both total and ischemic heart disease incidence was highest among current heavy drinkers as compared to drinkers in other categories. Similarly, total and ische
