Bacaan Ratib Al Attas Pdf DownloadlThe effects of two biocides on ciliary beat frequency and morphological changes in the gill lamellae of black bass, Micropogonias nigripinnis (Pisces: Acipenseridae). The effects of a 0.7 ppm amitrole and a 0.1 ppm benzisothiazolinone (BIT) mixture of biocides on ciliary beat frequency and lamellar morphology were studied in the gills of M. nigripinnis. Amitrole-exposed black bass had mean ciliary beat frequency values of 17.9 Hz that were significantly lower than the 26.2 and 26.3 Hz values for the control and BIT-exposed fish, respectively. Histological examination indicated that amitrole treatment impaired the surface epithelium by decreasing the height of the lamellae and initiating the appearance of platelets within lamellar epithelial cells. BIT treatment increased the mean ciliary beat frequency from 21.1 to 22.8 Hz, but the mean width of the lamellae (both basal and apical) decreased. The presence of platelets in the lamellae of the BIT-exposed fish indicates that BIT treatment promoted the exfoliation of epithelial cells. These results indicate that amitrole treatment reduced ciliary beat frequency, whereas BIT treatment increased ciliary beat frequency. It is speculated that, in the presence of BIT, the ciliated cells that are present above the platelets in lamellar epithelium are less effective at maintaining ciliary beat frequency. These findings indicate that chemical exposure might alter both the duration of the ciliated cell cycle and the ability of the gill epithelium to maintain ciliary beat frequency.// +build!windows,!linux package network import ("net/http" "net/url" "github.com/docker/dist

This seminar will deal with the development of the fields of Risiko- und Nutzenanalyse (R&N) and Unternehmens Risiko- und Nutzenanalyse (URNA) during the past three decades, and with their later developed and current status. The emphasis will be on the applications of R&N and URNA in the field of organization, and on the impact and value of these methods to achieve an improvement of the effectiveness and efficiency of organization. In order to make possible a broad and comprehensive discussion, many approaches and methods will be considered. The seminar will focus on the methodology and cognitive approach underlying R&N and URNA, e.g. their relationship to the Organization Risiko- und Kostenanalyse (ORA) concept, the notion of "Organizations Risiko- und Kostenanalyse (ORA)" in practice, the systematic application of R&N and URNA, the advancement of numerical methods for R&N, and the models, theories, and methods of R&N and URNA. The seminar will comprise presentations and discussions about diverse topics: the R&N and URNA background and conceptualization, the relationship to
