With the ongoing development of the liquid crystal display technology, the demand for the liquid crystal display panel is more and more. In order to meet the increasing demand of the liquid crystal display panel, how to fabricate the liquid crystal display panel is a core subject that needs to be further explored. Generally, the most mature liquid crystal display fabrication method is by the color filter on array (COA) substrate. The color filter on array substrate is a substrate on which a color filter is fabricated, so that the color filter (e.g., a red color filter, a blue color filter, and a green color filter) and a black matrix (BM) are all disposed on the color filter substrate. The color filter is manufactured by printing. The method for manufacturing the color filter includes the pigment printing, the photolithography, the electro-deposition printing, the inkjet printing, and so on. However, because the cost of the pigment printing is high, the development of the pigment printing is slow and the pigment printing cannot achieve the large area. The operation and maintenance of the pigment printing equipment is complicated, and the pigment printing is difficult to achieve. Moreover, the pixel division on the pigment printing is not limited to the integral number, which causes the over-long pixel division, and further causes the problems such as the green pixel not being clipped, and the blurred green pixel, etc. The throughput of the pigment printing equipment is low, so that the cost is high. Therefore, the pigment printing equipment is not able to meet the demand of the large-size liquid crystal display panel.

The pedal fork comprises a friction element which in its inactive state is pressed by a return element against a resistance of a return element against the friction element and a resetting element is used for the resetting of the position of the friction element relative to the pedal pedal assembly. A brake pedal as disclosed in EP 0 165 118 has a friction element between two return elements. By manual displacement of the force acting on the friction element against the return forces, the friction element is moved in a relative movement to the return elements. A resetting element is arranged between the friction element and a frame. The resetting element is fixed relative to the frame and has a spindle which is supported to a free end of the frame and which is connected to the friction element. The position of the friction element relative to the frame can be shifted relative to the spindle. This displacement is limited by the stop of the spindle. In this known pedal, the position of the friction element is limited by the stop of the spindle and the resetting element. The resetting element is urged by a spring into a starting position in which the friction element is pressed into the inactive position. It is an object of the invention to improve the pedal in such a way that a good pedal characteristic is achieved and a cost-effective manufacture is possible. The pedal fork according to the
