I use it to access my code. I've added the url like this: svn --username dave --password dave dave.mysite.com/ And I'm fine to do things like get a list of repositories etc... However, I can't see how to check out files locally, I just see how to check things out to a folder that doesn't have an actual repository. I just want to do a "checkout" into a local folder so that I can test on my device before I commit it to the server. I can't find anything on the net explaining how to use SVN in this way. Any ideas? A: It sounds like you want the svn serve command (from the command line: svn serve) If you have an svn:// URL, that would be the same as going to a web directory and using a web browser, and checking out a file. With the 'svn serve' command, the server is listening on port 8180 on your computer, and you can connect to that port, and do svn commands. A: You want to use the SVN repository over the network. I assume you have a working copy on your device. When you need to check something out, do `svn co local-copy` If you need to commit, you can do that too: `svn commit local-copy` I don't know of any easy way to keep that copy of the data up-to-date, I believe you have to
