----- ItemSize is a simple program that monitors the size of folders. When you double click on a folder, a small window will appear with the size of that folder. The size of the folder is compared to a baseline size, which must be selected in the program's preferences. This version of ItemSize has a few new features: - A log list is displayed when selecting folders in the main window, including the files, folders, and dates that were created or changed. The date (if set) of the last log entry is also displayed in this list. - A log window is shown when double clicking on a folder. The file name, folder name, and size of the folder are displayed in this window. - Error messages are displayed in the main window. - The main window can be resized by dragging it down. - The data is stored in a registry hive. - The log list is not sorted, so the program will update itself each time you open it. - The program is slow on 64 bit computers, as it must read the entire registry hive. - The program can read the value of the ItemSize.exe header, which allows it to be made portable between Windows versions. ----- ScreenShot: ----- FolderSize Screenshot: ----- Size definition User accountInformation: The account used to run the application RW System: The system that the application is runned on MajorFunction: The program's main function MinorFunction: The program's minor function RW Comment: Description of the function Size of the program: Size of the application with in the program system Size on disk: Size of the application with in the storage place Version: Version of the application Date(Us): Date of the program when it was created Date(Us): Date when the application was last modified State: Currently selected icons State: Currently selected folders State: Currently selected files State: Currently selected processes State: Currently selected services State: Currently selected keys Size of the data: Size of the data used by the application Size of the data: Size of the data collected by the application Description: 09e8f5149f
