BROWN/AFP/Getty Images) There is little appetite in the Obama administration for a clean bill to avoid the so-called fiscal cliff, especially if it comes coupled with even more spending cuts. In fact, the president has been explicit that he will not sign any bill that extends or adds to the government's debt. And as the Senate is on the verge of making the fiscal cliff a reality, the president has expressed deep pessimism about the 10-year plan to reauthorize the payroll tax. If it passes, it would be the first tax increase for workers since 2009. It would follow the expiration of the 2 percent payroll tax holiday in January, which has already been extended once. That means there's little time left to negotiate – the House has already voted – on whether to extend the plan. As with the fiscal cliff talks, the White House has little leverage. And, there are no new revenue-raising ideas being pushed in the Senate that have the White House's attention. An audit of possible federal expenditures by the Congressional Budget Office has estimated that any fiscal cliff bill that the Senate ultimately passes would add more than $1 trillion to the federal debt. The Senate has already passed a relatively toothless bill to extend jobless benefits for 2 million Americans. It is unclear whether it will come to the floor again, or whether the White House would support an even weaker package. The $

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of producing a cylindrical dielectric element and, more particularly, to a method of producing a dielectric element having at least one cured product on a circular band and an integral body having a central bore and at least one passage open at one end thereof. 2. Description of the Related Art Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. 2(1990)-5025 discloses a method of producing a dielectric element having on an upper end of a circular band at least one cured product and on the opposite side from the upper end at least one through hole to permit a chemical agent to permeate into the cured product. In the production method, a discharge device is used to discharge a chemical agent through the through hole, at a specified discharge opening, into the upper end of the dielectric element. Accordingly, the chemical agent is introduced into the dielectric element at the discharge opening with a concentrated discharge, hence the dielectric element undergoes an intensive treatment with the chemical agent. The resultant dielectric element is completed by positioning the upper end of the circular band in a central bore in a metal member (container). Alternatively, the upper end of the circular band is fixed to the central bore in the metal member. In either case, the dielectric element thus obtained has a metal member at the upper end, and hence an extra step is required to attach the metal member to the dielectric element. As a result, the conventional production method involves complex process steps, leading to an increase in production costs.Rule Five: Don't give terrible people more power than they should have The first time I had ever held a gun before was when I was six and my uncle 570a42141b
