* Erases the... Multi-player games are fun and a lot of fun. But they are also time consuming and frequently used. Few of them actually allow you to play with friends over the internet. In fact most online games are played from the player's point of view. Not that it is not possible, but the concept of other players helps the game play a lot more entertaining and can add to it's popularity. Viral Chess is one of the new online chess games that is fun, and allows you to play against up to eight people in real time. This game is free to play, and you will find that chess becomes a lot more interesting when you have up to eight people on the same board at the same time. The controls allow you to play chess by either selecting a player manually, or let the game automatically select a random opponent for you. The control for the player's moves is completely your own, but you do not have to worry about the board automatically rotating itself. No one is forced to play against you - the community pool of opponents are made up of players from all over the world. If you want to play against one person, the game will find you one. If you want to play on the same board as one of your friends, you can do that, and you will not have to be in one of your friend's game at that moment. You cannot create or delete your own games, but you can have a look at the public games that others have created. These games are there for you to join, so if you would like to try another game, just go ahead and join one of them. When playing against opponents, you are given the option to play a game of speed chess, or an endgame game. The speed chess game allows you to play an unlimited number of games that can be continued from any game played in the past. You can also play very long games if you want to. These games take up to around five minutes to finish. The endgame game mode allows you to play games that involve king or pawn moves only. You are given four or more options to create a game. This game is best played by a single player. You can create many custom games by modifying one or all of the four options. The options include random game length, starting position, number of players, and piece distribution. Your rating system will remember your rating from the last two games played. You can also set your rating to a specific level

The 7-Zip extension for Google Desktop adds a convenient, fast and simple way to open archives that were created with the 7-Zip compression utility. The main window of the application has a compact design and the user interface is clean and intuitive. This is a lightweight and free utility that allows its users to create and play back AVI files with BUP video segments and any audio frames. BUP (Bayesian Universal Priming) technology was developed at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and is based on the principals of the well known BUP-FM (Bayesian Universal Priming-First Music) player developed in the late 1990s. BUP technology achieves compression with one or more compression "modules", each of which "sees" the part of the frame that needs to be compressed and applies a compressed version of it to the rest of the frame. This is done in such a way that frames of a specific format (for example AVI) or even different types of frames (for example H.264 and AVI) can be processed with only a single compression module. BUP was designed as a frame-based compression technique. Unlike other compression systems that compress individual frames as individual packets or blocks of a video stream, BUP divides a video frame into small data segments (called primitives) and then applies two types of methods for compression: non-overlapping frames (modes 0 and 1) overlapping frames with arbitrarily sized subsegments (modes 2 and 3) The modes are controlled by the user and can be specified with the -mode switch, for example: -c 0 1 -mode -2 -default-m 0 1 The application supports playback of eight compression modes. Modes 0 and 1 use a Bayesian universal priming (BUP) algorithm that is described in the US patent application No. 20050049269, which is incorporated herein by reference. Modes 0 and 1 are non-overlapping modes that compress video frames as a series of non-overlapping primitives. One data segment is compressed at a time, each segment serving as a reference to a unique subset of pixels of the entire video frame. This subset is called a Bayesian universal priming (BUP) frame. BUP data segments can be analyzed to provide a binary indication of the presence or absence of a feature in the video frame. The primitives for the BUP modes are 9.5 x 09e8f5149f
