That is why we have a primary. "He cannot win the race through the current political system," Flake said. "We have to be concerned, because we could see the government of the United States in a direction that is far from our principles." (CNN) – Amy Kremer, co-chairwoman of the Tea Party Express, said the group doesn't have a timetable for its primary challenge to Arizona Sen. John McCain. The Palin endorsement, however, means the race is on. "Sen. McCain has become the face of failed Washington politics and Washington's failed leaders, including President Obama," Kremer said. "The political theater that has been unfolding in recent weeks is just a foreshadowing of what will happen if Sen. McCain is elected president of the United States." In the video, Palin says that the Palin endorsement is about a group of constituents she met on a visit to Washington. "Some of these people are in Arizona, some of them are in Alaska, and they were just incredible, all of them, in their wisdom, in their earnestness and in their conviction," Palin says in the video. "And I have been humbled that God had given me, um, the privilege of serving in his almighty, great hand. And on that basis, I would encourage all those true conservatives out there to put their support behind and endorsements on, um, through independent candidates, through true conservatives and conservatives of all kinds."
