Our new tool for the management of Office licenses' codes is a part of the "Our tools" family and was developed to help you in the unusual situations you might experience on a daily basis, such as: Lost or forgotten serial codes for Microsoft Office KeyLite

KeyViewer is a portable and easy-to-use program designed to read serial numbers and other information from the registry. The program has been included in our collection of free software for many years and, since it's been updated on multiple occasions, is still being improved. KeyViewer has a simple interface, with just a few options available. The tool is very easy to set up. The only thing you need to do is to drop the executable file in any folder on your machine and run the program, which will show you the software's serial number after you press Start. It can also be used to easily read information on the Windows version of Office and its components. We tested the app for compatibility with the latest Windows operating systems. Unfortunately, it does not come in 64-bit version, since the app has not been tested for compatibility with Windows XP (32-bit) or older 32-bit operating systems. In general, the app works flawlessly with Windows 7 and Windows Vista, but we can't comment on other versions. KeyViewer has no operational restrictions. You can use it as much as you wish. We verified that the program is absolutely free, so you do not have to worry about its removal or your credit card details being exposed to the third parties after the program has been used. KeyViewer Description: Our new tool for the management of Office licenses' codes is a part of the "Our tools" family and has been developed to help you in the unusual situations you might experience on a daily basis, such as: It is the easiest way to view the size of your hard disk. You'll see a progress bar, which shows you how much space is currently left. The app will count up to 500 MB, so if you have only 100MB free space, the software will show you that info. Disk Usage Manager also includes a process list to help you identify processes that are taking up a lot of disk space. You can check the full name of the application, its file size, CPU usage, running time and more. Finally, the app gives you the option to restore the defaults for your operating system. For instance, you can restore a specific date when the app was installed 09e8f5149f

Q: Use new line to end a block of code in Vim script I've got a bunch of blocks of code in my Vim script that look like this: `:call rpt.addNode(123)` `:call rpt.addNode(456)` `:call rpt.addNode(789)` This is a small snippet of a larger script I'm working on. Is there any way to replace these individual blocks of code with new lines like this: `:call rpt.addNode(123)` `:call rpt.addNode(456)` `:call rpt.addNode(789)` I'm not sure if this is possible without creating a function for this one specific scenario, but I like to keep it as DRY as possible. I've looked online and it seems like I may need to modify a template plugin or something, but I was hoping there was a simpler way.

A: There is no support for this in Vim. The closest you can get is to use `\` in the YAML comment to end a line in Vimscript. `:call rpt.addNode(123)` `:call rpt.addNode(456)` `:call rpt.addNode(789)` In your YAML comment this should work: `- comment :call rpt.addNode(123)` `:call rpt.addNode(456)` `:call rpt.addNode(789)` a moment, as the door opened, and a person came out and started towards them. "Did you make it, Doctor?" he asked the first person who came out the door. "Yes. Colonel," the Doctor responded. The officer stared at them for a moment before starting towards his truck. "Well, I guess we're riding with the colonel." the person said. They got into the back of the truck. The soldier rode with the driver. The driver pulled up behind the ambulance. He dropped the keys to the truck to the soldier, and the ambulance drove away. This
