1. **Figure 1-3:** You can use Photoshop to create a realistic look for your digital images by manipulating what's already there, or you can completely replace the original image with the one you create. The following sections take a look at two ways to bring a realistic appearance to your photos. The first is to refine what's already there. The second replaces a photo entirely with one of your own creation. Creating realistic images There are many ways to create a realistic appearance for a digital image. In the following sections, we show you a couple of ways to do this. Creating realistic-looking images By refining what's already in the image, you can create a similar look to one that may be more costly (or easier to create) when you only create your own (see the "Creating your own images in Photoshop" section, later in this chapter, for more information on creating your own images). All of the techniques we show in the following sections can be used to retouch images in layers (see Figure 1-4) or directly using the Direct Selection tool (see Figure 1-5). In Figure 1-6, the image on the right was created by using the Sponge tool. You see that the portrait image has had some great retouching already done by Photoshop. 4. **You can't create an exact copy of the original in this way, however. If the background is dark, as in this portrait example, the result will still be darker overall.** Retouching requires specialized expertise. Just because you can create photo-looking images, doesn't mean they're realistic.

The following sections show you how to create realistic images that don't resemble photos, but have a sort of "real life" look. If you want to create realistic images, use only one of the methods shown in this chapter.

You have to apply them selectively to the photo. Then, take several more images and process them in the same way, applying each technique at different points and adjusting the image until it looks right to you. For example, if you use a vignette effect, you can do it to just part of the image and then add many more layers of effects to the entire image. That way you can change the vignette around and then continue to layer on other effects until you like the overall effect. You can also use the Clone Stamp tool for smaller, easier adjustments.

In my estimation, the perfect setup for Photoshop is the combination of a high-quality display, monitor or laptop, and Photoshop. Some photographers use the Mac's built-in display or a high-quality external display because it just works. For the same reasons, display quality is also important for the computer. The killer combination for me is a high-quality panel (27-inch or bigger) and a high-quality display. But I have also been using monitors that have been too bright or have too much glare from sunlight. My laptop displays occasionally have a bit of glare. Light and View options. If you use Photoshop for a hobby or profession, such as fine art, photojournalism or graphic design, you will definitely want a high-quality display. In this post, I'll describe the qualities of monitors and displays that I consider to be ideal for Photoshop. This post is part of our Ultimate Monitor Buying Guide. You can learn more about Photoshop and how to buy a new monitor in our post: How to Buy a Monitor Monitor Features The role of a monitor is to visualize and edit images or video frames. A monitor has to have the following features: High resolution: The resolution of a display is the number of pixels it has. A pixel is the smallest point of an image and determines the image's sharpness. The more pixels, the more detailed the image can be. High-resolution monitors provide higher levels of detail. The resolution of a display is the number of pixels it has. Q: What are the data/exception handling methods in my security service? What are the recommended practices for protecting data, exceptions, etc. in a security service class? The service class serves as a domain layer, an access control layer, and a data access layer. My security service class has the following methods: VerifyAccess(): allows only authenticated users to access this service. VerifyAccess(): if authenticated, this service must check that the requested product was created by the authenticated user. ProductSave() is supposed to take two parameters: a product and an authenticated user. This will create the product in the repository class and then save it in the database. The security service class is in a different assembly than the repositories. So, I made the public properties public, and I can access them from the repositories. But, what do I do about the methods above? I don't want the repositories to be able to see the contents of these two methods. Should I put the methods in the security service class and make them public, or should I make the methods private and use other methods to protect the data? Should this service be contained within the security service layer? Should I make the whole repository class private? (This seems unnecessarily tightly coupled to me, but if I'm wrong then it will help.) A: You should make them private. The repository is just a data access layer, which is what they should be. The service (the "security service" is a misnomer) is what ties security and data together. Q: Chrome Extension: How to show a popup from onload I'm writing a chrome extension. On a certain page, I want to execute code right after the page is loaded. I can, however, only get this to work if I create a button to trigger the popup. Is it possible to open the popup directly after loading the page? I have tried creating this by adding to the onload event in the onload function in the onload function. But I get an error that says: "Uncaught ReferenceError:onload is not defined at webview-js:1515" onload="event = window.addEv entListener('load', function(){ // code to execute on page load });" How do I create a

God still loves him."

[Twitchy]Q: How can I manually loop through results of a rawQuery in Android? I have a table that I want to loop through each record in, and update them one at a time. For example, the table could be the following: id1 | data1 | data2 | data3

1 2 3 In my DBHelper I have a query called SELECT * FROM [dummy_table] How can I get this query to loop through each row returned, allowing me to update the data1, data2 and data3 fields (to the values of 12, 4, and 9, respectively)? A: You use Cursor cursor = db.rawQuery(sql, array of params, null); In your particular case this will be Cursor cursor = db.rawQuery("SELECT * FROM [dummy_table]", null); EDIT For only one row (no cursor) you can use the select query too as db.select("SELECT * FROM [dummy_table]

WHERE id =? LIMIT 1", new String[]{Integer.toString(id)}); > NavigableSet ordering is no longer an Option That section has changed. It now states "This type has no defined ordering" when you attempt to assign a value to it. That sentence has not been a part of the description of NavigableSet since the release
