I've been looking at the list of most sought after Pokemon, and it seems that if I want to get a specific Pokemon, I should focus on a type(creatures with higher Attack/Special Attack are usually more useful than ones with higher Defenses, for example), and then have lower Speed. My question is what else should I be aware of when looking at what Pokemon are powerful and/or useful? P.s. I'm not looking for a strategy or something. I just want to know more about the game. A: Pokemon are type, attack, and speed. Attack is base stats, which are doubled by type. These doubled stats are added to a combined attack power that is usually divided by 3 to result in a stat total. Speed is an ability, which will (generally) slightly slow a Pokemon down. It doesn't seem to be random, but the base speed stat is multiplied by 1.6, which means that slow moves will work slower, and fast moves will work faster. The lack of a "calculated" speed will have some weird weird effects, but this basically makes it so that the higher speed stat means that a Pokemon can outrun one with the same base speed with out speed bonus at a better rate. Type is also a special stat. It functions in a similar fashion as attack, but it's only used for a certain type of moves. Specials boost base stats (if the type isn't too common), and negate type. Although it's not a straight double or triple, it will usually allow you to do more damage than your opponent (unless both Pokemon are of the same type, but that's rare). Attack is used in base stats and also for the Combined Attack Power. But attack is not a multiplier. Instead, when you use a move, the base stat is divided by 3 to form the new stat. This means that raising Attack by one stat doesn't increase all
