Transport of white spot syndrome virus (WSSV) associated with shrimp gills into the haemolymph: purification of the attachment protein. Cell-free systems which support the transport of viruses within cell-free haemolymph (CFH) have been used to study the binding and fusion of baculoviruses at the cell surface. The dynamics of the binding of white spot syndrome virus (WSSV) to components of the CFH of Penaeus monodon was investigated by measuring the kinetics of the binding of radiolabelled virus to CFH, using surface plasmon resonance (SPR) and haemagglutination inhibition assay. These methods indicated that WSSV could bind to cholera toxin B subunit (CTB) coated SPR chips and that WSSV was specifically bound to ganglioside receptors. Coating of WSSV on silica
