All teachers in Ontario will have to undergo training on the province's proposed curriculum next year. Last week, the Liberals announced that they are spending $51 million over four years to have all teachers in the province receive training on the new curriculum, which aims to provide students with a stronger foundation in all subjects and more sophisticated thinking skills. While Ontarians will have to wait until next year to find out if the new curriculum is implemented, all teachers will be responsible for completing the training they received in the spring once the curriculum is finalized. The curriculum currently being used in Grade 1 will remain in place until next year. Ontario's English curriculum has been under review since 2000, when former Progressive Conservative premier Ernie Eves made his first effort to introduce a curriculum overhaul in response to criticisms levelled at the previous Progressive Conservative government's curriculum. The Progressive Conservatives led the government between 1998 and 2003, when James Smith was given responsibility for creating the new curriculum.You are here UrbanMe UrbanMe is an innovative new initiative to help you find and be part of a community which makes you happy and can make the most of your life.
