Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.2) (Latest)

The best way to tell if an image has been photoshopped is to use a grayscale image. If the colors are very bright or very dark when you make the grayscale version, it's likely been edited. This chapter offers a quick run-down of Photoshop's most prominent tools and concepts and shows you how to work around the quirks of Photoshop's layer-based system. What's in a Name: Understanding Photoshop Layers You see layers all the time, although you may not know it. They're all over Photoshop; they exist in every file in every document you create in the program. The name of a layer comes from the earliest iteration of the files that were used in old versions of Photoshop (and discontinued in recent versions). Photoshop layers have always existed. When you first open your Photoshop file, you see all the individual images in your document and their layers, including a blank layer that you can't see (if you have no images open, this layer appears when you open a blank Photoshop file). You can select a different image or open a new document and Photoshop automatically creates a new layer for that image. Editing a layered document You're probably well aware of the fact that Photoshop is a layered program, with layers above layers. To add more details to a Photoshop file, you first make a new layer. Then you manipulate that layer and the layers below it. To select a layer to manipulate, you first display it. (I show you how to do this in the "Selecting Layers and Using Selection Tools" section.) After you select a layer, you can work on the layer directly or manipulate the elements below it. You can also work on multiple layers simultaneously by moving and reordering them. The best way to view and manipulate layers is to use the Layer Control bar. See Figure 3-1. Figure 3-1: The Layer Control bar provides access to all the layers in a document. Figure 3-1 shows a typical document with all its layers. The figures in this chapter show a very simple document with three layers, which I name B, C, and D. To edit the layers, I first select the layer to work on and then use the keyboard shortcuts for moving the selection. To remove a layer, select it and press X on your keyboard. (If you know where the layer is, you can press the Delete key and press the layer's name to delete it

An anonymous source provided me this photo of Mike Lee—and you'll note that Mike Lee wears a hat. You also notice that one of the reasons that Lee is wearing a hat is because it is cold in Nevada. There are millions of reasons that we don't know why he is wearing a hat (a.k.a. why he doesn't feel the need to wear a hat in Utah) but this is a very good reason. Here are a few of the better reasons I've heard for why people don't wear hats. If your head gets cold, or you don't want to look like a douchebag, than wear a hat. The weather is pretty much the same in Utah as it is in Nevada. The purpose of a hat is to keep you from looking like a total douche. The hat has some major responsibilities. The hat is the only accessory that you can wear that doesn't look like you have 5 others on at the same time. That's because people look at a hat and wonder, "What the hell is wrong with that guy?" This doesn't mean that you can't still wear a hat, but you should probably try to look more put together in general. A hat is a great way to show that you're into something. What are you into? A hat is the ultimate accessory for people in Utah, because you can wear it and the people of Utah will stare and wonder what the hell you're talking about. The "hat" is basically a trench coat to Mormon eyes. (It isn't a trench coat.) Hats are for random head warmers. I know that I'm not going to have a hat with me when I go work. Not only because I'm a moron and don't care if I look like a total douche bag, but because a hat is a major part of looking like a total douche bag. Hats are lame. If you aren't in a state that requires a hat, then by all means, wear a hat. It looks great. That's really about it. People are already confused by your hat, so you don't need to go make things even more confusing. There are people that look at your hat and assume that you are making fun of them
