White designed the first AutoCAD, developed and marketed by a small company called Autodesk, Inc. in May 1983. The initial release of AutoCAD R13 was released in December 1982 on PC DOS 4.03 (and MS-DOS) as a desktop CAD program. More than 14 years later, the new AutoCAD R17 was released in May 1996 and was designed for Windows 3.0 and Windows 3.1. In August 1999, Autodesk released AutoCAD 2000 (AU) which included support for Windows NT and Office 2000. In December 1999, Autodesk released AutoCAD LT which was the first version of AutoCAD to support the Windows 2000. Alliance (ODA) content for free use by designers and architects. Examples include chairs, desks, electrical outlets, tiles, color palettes, images, videos, and all kinds of sample construction projects for home and work. In the early 21st century, Autodesk had licensed its intellectual property (IP) to third-party software companies, who in turn had licensed their customizations to individual users. The licenses for these were time-limited, and Autodesk allowed people to use the designs as they wished after a stated period of time. These licenses were provided for free and were available in both Autodesk's Design Premium and Autodesk Student product lines. This type of license is commonly called a "freeware license". In 2008, Autodesk's licensing policy changed. Instead of offering licenses for free for use by individual users, Autodesk began offering its IP through "app stores" - third-party download sites where users can download and install Autodesk software (not necessarily customizations). The app stores that were chosen were the Autodesk Exchange Apps store, which includes 3D house model builder software, the Autodesk Design Environment Editor, a design program, Autodesk AutoCAD, a DWG editor and other design applications, and the Autodesk Design Marketplace, which includes many products and services. The Design Exchanges, as they became known, became increasingly controversial. Building upon this, in 2013, Autodesk began selling licensed subscriptions (not customizations) to the App Store for $100-250 per year. Autodesk claimed the subscriptions offered better protection for the IP. There was no requirement for users to register with Autodesk to purchase this subscription. Building on this, in 2018, Autodesk began selling professional subscriptions, which required users to register with Autodesk and purchase this subscription, allowing access to the wider App Store and significantly reducing use of the Design Exchanges. In 2019, Autodesk began selling individual licenses at a rate of $1,000-$5,000. Software licensing Autodesk sells licenses for Autodesk software and objects. These include Design Premium, Design Standard, Design Standard Premium, Architectural, Mechanical, Electrical, and other types of software
