If you're a Blackmagic RAW user, chances are that you've already seen the missing piece: the studio docked workflow panel, which was only recently integrated into the Blackmagic RAW ecosystem. Unfortunately, the development of this tool has been very slow, as the company behind the camera couldn't release specific details about the product. However, that's no longer the case, as the Blackmagic RAW Company has unveiled the beta version of BRAW Studio Crack For Windows, which is now available for download. It's worth mentioning that you won't be able to import Blackmagic RAW videos without BRAW Studio being installed. If you've already acquired the Media Encoder plugin, you won't have to re-open your project to install this standalone application. When asked if the final version of BRAW Studio would include a creative workflow, the answer was not revealed at this moment, but the good news is that you'll be able to get your hands on beta versions in order to help developers finalize the product as quickly as possible. This new product is quite handy as it allows you to implement real-time adjustments for various video effects, including the capability to apply a wide variety of color grading operations. Furthermore, with the support for side-by-side comparison and batch processing, you'll be able to easily compare your latest project with previous ones, in order to optimize content or workflow. Rounding off, the software utilizes a unique media browser, which is designed with the Blackmagic RAW format in mind. The product will be released to the public as of September 1st, and it's a free download for all registered users. The Blackmagic RAW company has to date not said anything about its next event, so we're curious to know if it'll be the same location as the launch event for the ProRes RAW format or a different one. We'll be bringing you more details as and when they arise, so stay tuned!
