My 4 yr old daughter has a bone spur in her foot that has become an issue. She is prescribed a prescription strength Toradol, alternating two doses per day (2 mg/kg/dose). My concern is it is prescribed daily, so if she has a GI event, then we are seeing a large dose of Toradol. Is there an isolated dose available or can the dosage be given daily? If we can isolate a dose, when would be the best time to give that dose? I asked our nurse, and she mentioned we could give a dose 3-4 hours after the other dose. A: The short answer is that you can give a smaller dose more often. However, there are some drawbacks to this, which I'll list below. If you're taking a daily dose of 4 mg/kg, that means your kid gets 20 mg of toradol in the morning and 20 mg of toradol in the evening. She gets a total of 40 mg of toradol per day. The biggest problem with taking such a small dose more often is it makes the drug less effective. Sometimes, it even stops working entirely (though usually you get a warning before that, so you won't get a full dose). The reason why is because of a phenomenon called non-linear pharmacokinetics. Under this phenomenon, the therapeutic effects of the drug vary based on how much of the drug you have. If the total drug level is low, then it won't be enough to get the desired effect. If it's high, then it will likely

"The Huntington Beach Bad Boy" says he had no interest in continuing on with Bellator after his first stint in the organization, leaving to sign with the UFC. Ortiz revealed his decision after his training partner and UFC Hall of Famer Sean McCully suffered an eye injury and had to undergo surgery. "I didn't want to be in this position," he said. "I wanted to be an MMA fighter. I started going to a gym and I started training and I was the youngest fighter there by far. So, I started moving up in age and time and they said to me, 'Hey we want to sign you to a contract.' And I'm like, 'No thanks. I want to be a UFC fighter, so let me be an MMA fighter first and let me be like six to eight fights in, instead of one to three.' I said no thanks." Ortiz explained why he chose to turn down Bellator to continue his career. "It was my decision," he said. "I didn't do anything wrong or anything. It's just my decision. I want to be an MMA fighter. I'm a black belt in Tae Kwon Do. I want to be an MMA fighter. I wasn't doing that. I wasn't getting fights. I wasn't being paid that much. I was doing the promotions and them paying me to take part in the promotions and nothing came of it. So when they offered me the contract, I was like, 'Nah, I'm still going to be an MMA fighter.'" Ortiz also expressed his dismay at his ex-teammates not doing the right thing. "I'm sorry for the guys I had in the UFC," he said. "I don't know if they have their own gym or if they just go out looking for a gym and
