Breadcrumbs Dental Implants Dental implants are a series of restorative components that replace one or more missing teeth. They are often selected as the first treatment option for replacing missing teeth. Other treatments of missing teeth include a fixed or removable prosthesis. A fixed prosthesis is a complete permanent set of crowns, bridges or dentures. Removable prostheses are artificial teeth or bite blockers that are removable but may be a permanent option for replacing missing teeth. Bearing in mind the multiple functions of the smile such as aesthetics and function, the search for aesthetics and for treatment options that allow for a maintenance-free result, is ongoing. Implants replace the root of a tooth with an abutment that can be used to attach removable or fixed bridges. They are used to replace single or multiple missing teeth. The result is a strong and stable replacement tooth. Bridgework can either be implant supported or traditional bridges. With both fixed or removable bridges, the dental health professional assesses the condition of remaining teeth to provide a final restoration that will blend with the teeth's natural appearance. A more conservative method that preserves more of the natural look of the teeth is removable or an artificial tooth that may be used in combination with a removable prosthesis. For missing permanent teeth, conventional restorative dentistry replaces the missing tooth by a fixed or removable prosthesis. A removable dental prosthesis replaces the missing tooth with a temporary or permanent replacement tooth or bridge. The temporary or permanent replacement can be either a removable denture or a fixed partial denture. In some cases, retaining gums and healthy peri-implant bone are the best treatment options. As these options are more costly, and are less than ideal for the
