CMYK support: The `_CMYK_` color mode refers to cyan, magenta, yellow, and black, the colors that make up the most basic range of color printers. Many PC monitors output `_RGB_` colors (red, green, and blue). When an RGB image is printed on a printer, the printer actually uses CMYK inks to print on the paper. CMYK color support enables you to accurately print a color image that matches the color you saw on your monitor.

Image stabilizer: This control enables you to blur the edges of your image to smooth any sharpness that may occur. You can either apply the blur tool directly in the image window or do it after you make a selection.

Image-processing tools: This category helps you enhance the image, including removing dust and blemishes, adjusting brightness and contrast, and applying various enhancements like color correction and image adjustment.

Adjustment layers: Adjustment layers are the basis for most adjustments that you make in Photoshop. You can see the Adjustment layers that make up the image in the Adjustments Layers dialog box, as shown in Figure 6-9. Adjustment layers are all based on a particular type of adjustment. There are four predefined adjustment types that you can choose from for each image when you open it in Photoshop. You can change the order of the adjustment layers by clicking on the small triangles at the top of the dialog box and then selecting the order in which you want the adjustment types to be applied. Clicking the triangle next to the order field moves it up or down.

FIGURE 6-9: The Adjustment Layers dialog box allows you to make some adjustments to a selection or image. You can choose different types of adjustments for your photo based on the type of photo. A portrait photo will always include the Exposure and Curves types of adjustments, but a landscape photo will include Image and Lighting types of adjustments. To make the best adjustments, be sure that you have a full Understanding your camera menu items and the ISO, aperture, and shutter speed settings for your photography set up the right way. If you're still having trouble figuring out your camera settings, go to Chapter 5. After you have all the settings ready, your next step is to create a good exposure with good contrast by using the basic image adjustments (brightness and contrast). If, for some reason, the image has

Q: Custom PHP templating with MVC I have created a custom PHP MVC framework and have been searching for a replacement for Smarty and Twig. Have come up with some great resources but I would like some feedback on what you guys think would be best. Custom_PHP version 2.0 I have used the custom_php libraries on another project and have found them to be very powerful. I have also used composer, namespaces, and classes to make MVC development a breeze. Structures & examples Namespaces Files Example Installing I have included it in the beginning of my custom_php files, as well as other external libraries. I have also created a bin folder to hold the required libraries, to eliminate having to make changes to other composer.json files. Projects You can look at my projects github repo: (Just add your github username for a free private repo.) Usage The documentation is very in-depth and is detailed in my install.txt file. To get started, at the root of your app, create a controller and a view for the index.php file. `index.php (Controller) [MYAPP][MyVendor][AppNamespace][SampleController] MYAPP Sample`
