You can enjoy an amazing fantasy adventure and experience a vast world and delve into various situations that are unique and exciting. In the world of Tarnished, the land of fantasy is revealed through the eyes of an intelligent teen named Ben. Ben wakes up one day and begins a journey in the effort to find his missing parents. However, he is immediately engulfed by a mysterious force. Since he can not return home, he can not be reunited with his parents, and because he wants to rescue them, he is pulled into the mysterious world of Tarnished. Ben never looks back as he travels, but the battle ahead leaves a deep impression. ▲Game Mechanics In the world of Tarnished, Ben becomes a main character with his own independent party of two Knights and an Archer. An expanded party will increase the number of powerful support skills, but since they must travel on their own, one of them will be required to rely on a single party member, making the party more active. ▲Visuals With a high-resolution graphical style of watercolor paintings, Ben's world is a world where the landscape and character designs are beautifully crafted, and each dungeon has a complex and detailed setting that subtly reflects the origin of each dungeon. The surroundings will always be colorful and make you feel refreshed. The action will be based on classic action role-playing games. While the graphics are in the Renaissance era, it is made clear that Ben is a strong character who can interact with other characters and people in a modern setting. ▲Fantastic Aesthetic You are not a mere character that walks around, the battle is an interactive experience that is different from other games. You choose a path, make a move, and do battle with the opposition. The attacks are strong, and there are many things to be aware of while taking an active role. Q: how to redirect user to exit from trap I have a trap set in a bash script and I would like that trap to terminate the script, is there a command I can set to do this other than clearing the trap? #!/bin/sh trap "EXIT" CANNOT_COMPILE # DO ALOT OF WORK exit 0 The script is currently starting a C++ compiler, but needs to stop it sometimes. I don't want to set the trap to continue the script, because that way a disabled script can run indefinitely. If I call /sbin/trap -l | grep exit it seems that actually there are 2 exit traps on bash, one being the one I want, but if I start a new shell the new trap is cleared and the compile never ends. Is there a way to clear one exit trap, and have the currently running script exit? A: I think the easy way to solve it is that use JQ like this: jq -e. < /tmp/trap_data You can make another script called 'JQ.sh' that looks like this: #!/bin/sh # param 1 is trap line jq -e. < /tmp/trap_data
