Download: The LostWinds series hasn't been forgotten by the western community, and now there's a sequel out to remind us all why we loved it so much. Although the first game was about a man's struggle for survival as he rode the dragon towards the West, this one focuses on a man's journey to meet his lover, his heart's desire. In this sequel, you control a man with a cute little flute named Keiichi who wants to find his father's beloved and the one person in the world who can help him. As the story opens, we find Keiichi is embarking on the adventure of a life time. From an abandoned village, to a mysterious tower that's been shut up since the 1970s, he has no choice but to go in search of his father's beloved. Strange things begin to happen on his journey though, and with each step that he takes, he becomes more and more unlike the Keiichi we first knew. The first main aspect of the game is the music. Although most of the game is silent, it never loses touch with you the player. Music plays across the entire game, and is quite often a great link between the story and the action. One section has you making a noise by blowing into your flute, while another has you playing along to a jazzy song. The other aspect is the controls. You are given a limited control over the character Keiichi, and you have to use the flute to make sounds, jump, and use items. With only a select few items at hand, you have to play with what you have. At times, making a sound is an annoyance, but at the same time, it keeps the game from being a true visual novel. In some, at least. The game is a bit short, but that's part of what it does. The whole story takes around 6 hours to complete, but you can play through the game once and see most of it. The music is fantastic, and the story is quite deep for a visual novel. We recommend that you give this game a shot. LostWinds 2 is available on Playstation 4 for $25.99. Sword Art

The macrocyclization of peptides is important to studies on structure and function of biologically active peptides. A new class of macrocyclic peptides (called as miniparticles) has been synthesized using the polymerization of peptide-containing monomers side-by-side with or without an organic solvent. Using the miniparticles, a series of synthetic peptide immunoglobulin and T cell receptor mimetics were prepared by polymerizing two natural and three unnatural (i.e., nonhydrolyzable) peptide-containing monomers side-by-side with an organic solvent. The polymerized peptides (called as miniparticles) demonstrated their ability to strongly bind biologically important antigens (i.e., dsDNA and melanoma cells) without, or with minimal, noticeable aggregation of the miniparticle antigen-binders. Furthermore, we have shown that these miniparticles demonstrated tumor-specific targeting and selective reactivity to cancer cells over normal cells. Due to the unique properties of miniparticles,
