Effects of lindane and oxydemeton-methyl on male sexual behavior in rats. Adult male Long-Evans rats were given either lindane or oxydemeton-methyl (0, 250, 500 or 1000 mg/kg) in vehicle. The effects on male sexual behavior were compared to those of vehicle control, cyclophosphamide and adenosine at 500 mg/kg. Water consumption decreased during the initial 4 h following administration of cyclophosphamide and adenosine. Oxydemeton-methyl and lindane significantly decreased water consumption over the 4 h period following treatment. On the sexual behavior test, male rats were placed in a neutral testing arena and allowed to explore it for 3 min before the testicular hormones were removed and the number of intromissions and ejaculations observed. Sexual behavior, as measured by intromissions, was significantly decreased in males given lindane, while doses of oxydemeton-methyl \geq 250 mg/kg and vehicle control significantly increased intromissions compared to males treated with vehicle. All three compounds increased ejaculations compared to vehicle. The decrease in intromissions was not due to agonist activity on central dopamine receptors, since there was no reduction of male sexual behavior following treatment with domperidone. Both lindane and oxydemeton-methyl did not affect lordosis behavior, therefore the changes in sexual behavior were not due to a decreased sensitivity to lordosis. The results from these studies demonstrate that the diminution of sexual behavior following treatment with lindane was not due to agonist activity on central dopamine receptors, but the effects of oxydemeton-methyl and lindane can be accounted for by behavioral suppression. The structure of the extracellular region of CD45-alpha and its implications for T-cell signal transduction. The tyrosine phosphatases SHP-1 and SHP-2 bind to tyrosine-phosphorylated proteins in the cytoplasm and are then transported to the cell membrane where they modulate the activity of signaling molecules. Mutational analysis in the phorbol ester receptor protein, PKC-theta, indicates that binding of the cytoplasmic domains of both SHP-1 and SHP-2 is required for functional receptor activation. However, the molecular mechanism of this activation remains unknown. To characterize the molecular interactions of SHP-1 and SHP-2 with the extracellular domains of PKC
