Caitlyn Diggs walks out from the white dress she plans to wear to her wedding, back into the old, hand-me-down dance dress she wore to her senior prom some twelve years ago. Weighed down by t-shirts, jeans, and the weight of her history, Catherine slips on the dress and walks over to the mirror, fluffing her hair and taking time to make sure there's no sullenness in her face. In a voice full of joy and optimism, she sings "Once upon a time..." in a bright, and carefree tone. At the time, I had no expectations of what that would mean for the future, but as we settled into our new classes together, it only became more and more difficult to tear myself away from those who would always be there for me. In some ways, it was the first true moment of freedom: I didn't have to pay attention to anyone else, I could follow my self-determined heart and I did, running barefoot across a field of flowers before the end of night. I didn't need to worry about grades or any of that nonsense. I may have been acting unpredictably, but the point was
