The chance of a repeat attack on the US was extremely low, Russian military officials said. But the country's security agencies warned against complacency, saying the virus is still being studied and was a potential risk for other countries. The north's biggest arsenal manufacturer, Norinco Group, also warned the virus posed a threat to China's own weapons industry. The alert led to panic selling in markets, but stocks recovered to close almost flat in volatile trade on Monday. "The virus is not really a big threat," said a trader at a securities exchange in Shenzhen, south of Hong Kong. "Investors were so worried about all the reports that they just wanted to sell anything. But they can't sell all their stocks." Like the United States, China's authorities have warned people about a computer virus that started killing off the computers of organisations across the country on Friday. It's not clear how the virus affects computers, but experts fear the virus could be used by criminal hackers to steal secrets. Experts in North Korea's state-run news agency KCNA said the virus was found in Pyongyang's nuclear research facility. HOW IT WORKS Computer viruses work by corrupting files on a computer, like a long list of programmes. Any computer infected by a virus can pass the infection on to computers connected to its network, or even other connected machines. The best-known computer viruses are designed to cause computers to crash or to slow to a crawl. More sophisticated viruses can delete or alter files, or plant their code into other programmes so they can easily hijack computers when they start up. Vir

A: It is the video codec in use. Matroska does support 6 more video codecs (h.264, mpeg2, mpeg4, real, theora and mpeg4-part2). But you need to add the matching codecs in your Matroska settings (File > Preferences > Advanced > Matroska settings). In the linked video you can see they use MPEG-4 Part 2 (H.264). Q: Inherit an Interface without knowing the derived class I have the following classes in Visual Studio 2010: interface A { } class B : A { } class C : B { } class D : C { } Now I would like to inherit from A without knowing the type of A. As I have an instance of A, I would like to be able to determine what type it is. In addition, I am also trying to determine the common members between A and B/C/D. A: I'm not sure I fully understand what you're trying to do, but the following would allow you to access the members common to A and all the subtypes: A C = new C(); if (A.IsAssignableFrom(C.GetType())) { // A inherits from all the subtypes of A } If you only want to get members in your base interface, you can do: interface A { GetB(); } interface B { GetC(); } interface C { GetD(); } class A : A { public override GetB() { return null; } } class B : A, B { public override GetC() { return null; } } class C : B, C { public override GetD() { return null; } } class D : C { } That will allow you to get the members of any A subtype and any of its subtypes and not compile an error. I'm not sure what you'd want to do if A and B are the same and B and C are the same and C and D are the same, but I can't see any way to get the members with that structure. #region License /* * Copyright 2002-2010 the original author or authors. * * Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the
