Today we let the GOP line up nominees to replace David Vitter for next year's U.S. Senate race. Today the national press is keeping a watchful eye on the Louisiana race, which looks to be a tight one. The Louisiana Senate race is proving to be a test of ideas. The state's Republican Senator David Vitter has called his Democratic opponent, one-term U.S. representative Bill Cassidy, "vulnerable" and "flip-floppy." Vitter is attacking Cassidy on moral issues. Back in 2010, he took the fifth when asked about the sex scandal known as "D.C. Madam." Asked by MSNBC's Steve Kornacki if he would "consider settling" the case against the alleged madam, Vitter responded, "No. I'm sorry. I'm not doing that," before walking off the set. What's happening now is that Cassidy, a pediatric heart surgeon, is walking back on some of his statements about the de-plorable. One tactic being used by the GOP is to portray Cassidy as soft on issues like birth control and abortion. The headlines about the Louisiana Senate race are: Gosnell: Live look at abortion doctor known as 'super-predator' Senate Republican group knocks Bill Cassidy on birth control and abortion Louisiana Senate race looking tighter than in past elections Louisiana Senate race tightens with Bill Cassidy attack on abortion and birth control Louisiana Senate race almost as tight as it was in 2012 Louisiana Senate race slightly tightening as Vitter and Cassidy mount fresh attacks on each other Louisiana Senate race almost as close as in 2012 Louisiana Senate race remains tight as GOP tries to distance itself from Vitter Louisiana Senate race shows two candidates fighting hard to retain Republican seat Louisiana Senate race tightening again as GOP tries to distance itself from Vitter Louisiana Senate race shows two candidates fighting hard to retain Republican seat Louisiana Senate race shows two candidates fighting hard to retain Republican seat 0cc13bf012

Explosive Triggers Table of Contents Overview of Explosion Triggers Managers can choose among several different types of explosion triggers. Triggers allow you to set off an explosion in your application's code when certain events take place within the application. If an explosion trigger allows you to generate an individual blast at a time, you create a single explosion every time an event occurs that matches the trigger's requirements. If the trigger only allows you to create a single blast, it fires only when the first requirement is met, and later requirements have no effect. Triggers are not specific to the type of application environment you use; you can use them in any type of C# or.NET application that supports the Isolated Storage and requires the usage of an AppxManifest. Which Trigger You Should Use You should not use any of the triggers if any of the following conditions apply: You use the AppxManifest file with the application, and you only want to allow a single application to be used at a time. You use the AppxManifest file with the application, and you want to allow a single application to be used at a time. You use the Isolated Storage Support (IISu

PC Design.Q: Highcharts datetime tooltip incorrectly displays multiple times I'm making a highcharts chart with a tooltip that's a table and I'm having an issue with the tooltip displaying multiple times. I'm using Highcharts' "ignoreHiddenSeries" option and "datetime" format. I'm very curious to know what is happening. The dataset consists of time stamps of when I change keys at server A. For each time stamp, the dataset records the status (as updated by key number) and the time. So, for example, I'll have: status0,time0 status1,time1 where time0 is the current time. If I select time1, Highcharts sets the tooltip correctly, and shows only the status1 for the current time. However, Highcharts also shows every previous status0. For the first time, that's no problem, since the whole table is visible, but if I go back to the previous time, Highcharts also shows every previous time's status0 in the tooltip (and every time it changes). I tried to remove all the series and re-add, but that just causes every time I go back, to show more of the previous time and eventually stack. I cannot go back to the previous time, or it messes up all the times. I've posted my code below. If anyone could provide insight as to what's going on I'd be very grateful. Thank you!
