However, just because you know how to use Photoshop doesn't mean you can edit a picture correctly or use it professionally. You can make simple edits to enhance a picture, and you can even make a successful business out of that service. To do so, you need to first learn some basic techniques in Photoshop, which is what this section covers. Photoshop works in layers. A layer is any image you apply in Photoshop — it's like a skin layer, and it can be recolored and adjusted later. You can have several layers on top of one another, and you can switch between them. In order to edit an image, you need to be able to go back to previous layers and make changes to them. It's important to understand that you can start with a single layer of a photo, such as a wood board, and make changes and adjustments and bring up the next layer and make changes, without having to delete the previous layer. By using the features of the program, you can keep adding layers and changing the image in stages. Because you can manipulate images with multiple layers, you are able to recreate and redraw images as many times as you need. You can use the levels tool to keep the brightness of your image balanced when you're adjusting colors. You can find out more about the levels tool in Chapter 14. Photoshop's command panel is a set of buttons that make it easy to access the many features of the program. You can drag and drop tools and objects from other programs into Photoshop. You can also add a layer by clicking the layer icon on the Layers panel and then clicking the item you want to put on a layer. You can then make edits to that layer. Because Photoshop is the most popular graphic-design program in the world, you'll often find discussions of it on websites such as . The open space between the upper and middle levels of the Central Station has been preserved in this picture by French architect Dominique Perrault. To the upper level of the Central Station, Perrault has constructed two sloping floors, which run down to the L2 level (lower level 2). The lower level can be accessed through the lower corridor of the station. It contains shops, offices and other businesses. The open space between the upper and middle levels creates a connection between two separate levels, giving a new image to the former Central Station, nowadays split into two levels. This space has been preserved thanks to a sweeping semicircular roof, which surrounds the entire building. The project was mainly the result of a compromise between the architect, the French Ministry of Transport, and the concessionaire, the railway-carrier SNCF. The compromise position was a merger of the vision of the railway operators with the architect's vision. The planner Henri Pinto of Provence-les-Alpes Regional Council wished to keep a clear view from the station towards the shops, offices and businesses on the lower level. The lobby of the station would provide a meeting point for the passengers and the staff. The vision of the railway operators was to give passengers a new experience by making the station wider, and, therefore, bigger. The current layout of the Central Station is the result of various decisions and compromises. The merger of the visions of the railway operators and the architect, which is evident in the preserved connection, started in the 1980s. The idea of a merger was brought about partly by the architects. The station car-parks were the result of a compromise between the architect and the rail-carrier, who had a vision of a modern station for the 21st century, and the planners, who wanted to retain the historic street-level before the modernisation of the station. There were other compromises. The architect wanted to create a naturally ventilated station, but he was not allowed to change the three façade of the building. In the lobby, some designers wanted a ceiling with parquet flooring, and others a concrete ceiling. The architects: the architect, the politician and the concessionaire The architects, Dominique Perrault and Jacques Rougerie, are of equal importance for this project. They were the architects who created the station and, therefore, the concessionaire built the station according to their plans. Rougerie was the commissioner

Agartala (AFP) - Former Indian prime minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee, India's first democratically elected head of government, died in the US on Tuesday after a prolonged illness, government and media reported. Vajpayee, 92, a Hindu nationalist figure, led the country between 1998 and 2004, a period during which the reformist Congress party won parliamentary elections by a landslide. His family said he died of a massive cardiac arrest in New York on Tuesday. A former Indian cricket captain and a close ally of former prime minister Indira Gandhi, Vajpayee became prime minister in 1998. He represented the All India BJP, a party affiliated to the right-wing Hindu nationalist parent organisation Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh, as its parliamentary party leader. The recent elections saw the Congress party, led by

Sonia Gandhi, pick up 288 seats, giving it enough mandate to form a government by itself. Vajpayee's party won 119 seats and allied with regional parties for a strong majority in the 545-member lower house of parliament. Gandhi, a former Indian anti-corruption crusader, has won praise for being calm in the face of protests and attacks by political opponents, reports said. A BJP statement quoted president Pranab Mukherjee as saying "there is no doubt that Atal Ji is no more" and that the country was hit hard by his death. "But this has only enhanced his stature... In fact, he became an icon for all Hindus worldwide," Mukherjee said. Vajpayee is survived by his wife and two sons. A massive public funeral will be held at the BJP headquarters in New Delhi on Wednesday. Friday, February 26, 2012 February Newsletter Hi there fellow scrapbookers! I hope you had a wonderful Valentines Day! Our class will be meeting February 26th, so it's time for our newsletter. This month's Project Rich is our Project Life layout about a week in our lives. This was a fabulous layout to teach for us. I loved the story it told, and the photos were perfect. My first project was a pocket page from a journaling card. I used embellishments from stash and I did a fabric tied on doily for the top of the pocket. My second project was an adorable mini album for my 8 year old daughter. It
