Magnifying endoscopy with narrow-band imaging detects differences in normal and neoplastic gastric mucosa. Narrow-band imaging (NBI) is a newly developed magnification technique that is used for the first time in a prospective trial for the comparison of normal and neoplastic gastric mucosa. NBI demonstrated on-line histologic features of cells with characteristics of gastric differentiation. In particular, the main neoplastic diagnosis in the early endoscopic stage was a well-differentiated adenocarcinoma. There were significant differences between the dysplasia and adenocarcinoma groups. Dysplasia cells had a bright yellowish color, whereas the adenocarcinoma cells were dark-grayish and slightly irregular. The main histologic
