He was all set to sign a lucrative contract with a professional sports team in South Beach, but the deal stalled when the Bulls sent him to Chicago to rehab from a knee injury. The tryout was Williamson's last chance to play football in a nationally televised setting in front of the millions of fans who watched him come out of Duke University as the most coveted high school prospect in history. "I was signed at the end of the year and was going to go to South Beach, but I decided that I wanted to rehab from the injury and come to America because the injury wasn't too bad," Williamson told Bleacher Report. "I decided to come to the United States so I could rehab my knee and come back stronger." The decision paid off. Williamson signed his multimillion-dollar, four-year contract with the Chicago
