Murine IgG subclass deficiency and IgG-mediated lymphocyte-mediated cytotoxicity in a T cell-dependent antigen system. The role of serum IgG subclass in resistance to microbial infections and susceptibility to recurrent bacterial infections is well established; however, the effects of an IgG subclass deficiency on subsequent in vivo immune responses remains controversial. In this study, we demonstrate a profound defect in T cell-dependent humoral immune responses in both wild-type and IgG1-deficient mice. In addition, IgG1-deficient mice are highly susceptible to spontaneous bacterial peritonitis and infection with Salmonella typhimurium, streptococci, and Mycobacterium avium. These findings suggest that in vivo humoral immunity is critically dependent on the presence of serum IgG1, and that IgG1 may be an important regulator of innate and adaptive immune responses.
