repair.customboots.com . REPAIRING A RECENT SHOE SOLES Any factory repair job can be performed on existing shoe soles, but it is important to know the proper techniques for the particular problem. To ensure a good repair job, it is very important to follow the following steps: . BEFORE YOU START. . 1. Before you even think about cutting a hole in your shoe sole, check to make sure that the sole is still in its original packaging (if it is) or that you have a backup suitable for replacement purposes (if it is). . Make sure that the shoe you are going to be working on is in good condition, especially the last. Any, spot, hairline cracks or other irregularities in the shoe, particularly in the toe box, should be repaired first. . 2. Put the shoe in a safe area. . 3. If possible, remove the shoe from its package and set the shoe aside on a flat, clean and level area. . 4. Now you're ready to start the repair. . ENTER THE MAKING PROCESS. . 5. Remove the laces from the shoe. This is usually done by simply cutting the laces with a knife. Cut them off about 2 to 3 inches from the top of the shoe, taking care not to cut the leather. This will prevent the laces from getting caught in the sewing machine. . 6. Turn the shoe upside down. Pull off the upper heel counter, lining, tongue and other removable parts of the shoe. When you're finished, you should be left with nothing more than the soles and perhaps a small amount of the inner sole. . 7. Using a handy measuring tool, measure the depth of the hole (all holes should be to scale). Write this measurement down, along with the shoe's size, size of the repair area and the thickness of the sole. . 8.

Locate the hole in the sole by comparing the holes in the other shoe soles on the repair table. This can be a little tricky, since the comparison can sometimes be deceiving. For instance, one pair of shoes may have a deep, round hole, while a different pair of shoes might have a very shallow, circular hole. . 9. Be careful not to cut through the second sole (if you're working on a double sole, this will only involve one shoe).

The ubiquitin proteasome system (UPS) is involved in regulating many cellular events that modulate tumorigenesis. We have shown that the inhibition of the proteasome resulted in a dose-dependent cell cycle arrest at the G2 phase, a decrease in cell growth and induction of apoptosis. The apoptosis-inducing capability of a proteasome inhibitor, MG132, was further enhanced by the addition of the multikinase inhibitor PP2 or the c-Src inhibitor dasatinib. The enhancement of the apoptosis was associated with a decrease in c-Src and Rho kinase activity. These data demonstrate that the proteasome may be a potential target to enhance cancer cell death by modulating upstream regulators of c-Src and Rho kinase. The invention relates generally to microfluidics systems and methods and, more particularly, to microflu
