Those tags can be easily removed and simply be placed in your pocket or bag. When you pull the case out, you'll notice that it's already marked to tell which model of your phone it belongs to. I found out this month that Water Drop is now offering a case for every single type of device imaginable. If you look carefully, you'll see a couple different cases for the

The role of molecular modeling in prediction of binding energies of scorpion-mammalian voltage-gated calcium channels. Different bioinformatics tools such as receptor-ligand docking are used to gain insight into the structural basis for the mechanism of action of peptides from scorpion venom. The majority of the computational studies of scorpion venom peptides involve receptor-ligand docking. Unfortunately, only few of these studies are successful due to the lack of crystal structures of the peptides in their complexes with the predicted receptors. In order to improve the accuracy of prediction of complexes of peptides with their receptor, we used the previously identified scorpion alpha-toxin CTa from Buthida scorpion C. d. terrificus and mammalian L-type Ca channel alpha1C, and performed a series of mutations and molecular dynamics simulations. By using a combination of the knowledge-based MMF94S force field, the AMBER 9 computer program, and molecular dynamics to explore energetic interactions, we searched for the most favorable structural conformation and stabilization of a peptide-receptor complex, which then allowed to gain insight into the mechanism of action of the peptide with the receptor. The modeled complex with alpha1C is rather stable and allows us to predict the structural basis for the interaction of the peptide with a mammalian voltage-gated Ca channel. We report here the computational predictions, that the recognition of scorpion alpha-toxin CTa involves electrostatic interaction with the receptor Ca channel alpha1C. The hexahistidine tag of the peptide and the residues at the receptor-peptide interface undergo conformational changes./* * Copyright (c) 1998, 2003, Oracle and/or its affiliates.
