You are here Russian Leader Gives A Charge And A Cachet Friday, January 13, 2014 Who knows where Vladimir Putin will take Russia? Over the years the Russian leader has shown that he can be unpredictable and to many his idea of a great leader is a chap who gives people what they want -- a strong man who is competent, controlled and resolute. Putin has been elected twice (first time, in 2000, only just) as Prime Minister and now he has been confirmed as the President of the Russian Federation. After months of uncertainty, Putin has now been officially confirmed by the Duma as the winner of what is known as the election for the President of the Russian Federation. Putin's victory is a result of what happened in the last two weeks. Russia's Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev conceded the election to Putin and this was followed by the constitutional court ruling that Putin is the rightful successor to the Russian President. This decision was then followed by Putin's victory in the Duma, confirming the last two decisions, paving the way for Putin's victory in the country. Now all that remains is for Putin to give that famous presidential approval. This would have been really hard for Putin to avoid. He was propelled into power due to the financial crisis. The entire country has now seen two weeks of riots outside parliament, forming a barrier around the building, to protest against the Prime Minister's decision to concede the election to Putin. There have been subsequent protests against Putin, mainly from Alexei Navalny's (or 'Putin's Opponent', as he has been nicknamed) supporters, who have been trying to close the internet and create chaos across Russia. Navalny was detained by the police and was put on trial for organising protests without permission and inciting protests. Putin has remained on the defensive throughout this as a result of the demonstrations, most of which he has declared to be illegal. His response to these protests has been to suggest that 'illegality' is the root of all evil in the West (that and the global warming …). Putin declared that he hoped the protests would not derail his hard work to make Russia a strong country and that "most of the participants are no more than naive pensioners and irresponsible young people who do not have jobs or a future". Russia has since been rocked by an economic crisis, with inflation rising to 14% and as much as 30% in some of

through a major earthquake but I don't know how much damage the non-pitched roof would take until I would see it.) And now I got my second, more local concrete project. Near the end of our trip a friend of mine, Kim, surprised me with a (well deserved) gift - The DMK Designer's Trunk. We were thinking of what to do for Father's Day and Kim's idea was to buy me a designer's trunk that I would probably use as a suitcase to carry around with me. I had just finished painting my garage the other day and Kim's idea for the canvas was to make a vintage trunk look like it had been painted. It sounds simple enough but it's hard to convey in words how it turned out. Kim and I had a lot of fun making the trunk and I'm really happy with how it turned out. The design on the front of the trunk was inspired by some retro-style vector art. I've always had a problem with the DIY projects where I'd get a great idea but then struggle to realize it. When the time for the actual painting came around it took much longer than I'd expected. It wasn't due to more time on the job, but rather lack of motivation and interest. Fortunately I forced myself to finish the project and it turned out well. The trunk is absolutely gorgeous. I even had an interesting experience. I was traveling to the airport for a flight and found myself sitting in the parking lot of the LAX airport. I saw several "Dapper Designs" trunks lined up in the parking lot and recognized them as having been featured on the Design Crush website in a previous article, "A Tale of Two Trunks". When I reached for my vehicle's door handle my heart started racing. I thought that the car I was about to enter was in the lot to pick up one of the trunks that I saw when I was getting out of the parking lot. Alas, it was only a coincidence. Monday, April 22, 2011 We're making the final preparations for our one year trip to Brazil. Our visit is going to be a short one, and we'll be traveling and sketching in São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro and Salvador (the Northeast coast of Brazil). We only have a few days in São Paulo so we're looking into some minor projects so that we have something to show to our friends when we arrive there. In the meantime we're missing our parents and wondering how things will
