I have an established connection for some IO, so if I need to decompress it twice, one would be enough. The problem is I have to distinguish between what I get from the file being passed in as a stream and what I generate myself. A: Yes, you can have a second stream "on top of" the first stream. This can either be something like: FILE *file1, *file2; ... file2 = inflateInit2(file1, -1); ... on top of which you then can continue in both directions. 6d1f23a050
