from a range of fields and hospitals to discuss the underlying values of what makes healthcare a successful endeavor. This year's event will focus on health systems and will take place on October 30, 2019. The event is free and will be hosted at the TIA. Click here to attend! The worldwide hospital standardization efforts at the beginning of the past century were founded on the assumption that high standards of quality of care can be maintained by the use of standardization and procedures developed and introduced by a particular country. While attempts to create global standards have remained controversial to the present day, the modern approach to health technology assessment (HTA) tends to adopt a descriptive rather than a normative perspective, focusing on how information is used rather than what it is aimed at, and what purpose it is designed to serve. Indeed, until the past decade, the focus of HTA activities has been predominantly on the development of recommendations for health policy makers and planners. However, the epidemiological transition which has transformed the health needs of the population over the past century and the emergence of the concept of Universal Health Coverage (UHC) have given rise to a growing interest in financing both the inputs of health services, which in the past were provided to all as free of charge, and the quality of care in terms of the effectiveness of its outcomes. It is in this context that research on health systems research is conducted.

Hospital Standardization as an Organization Development Strategy Dr. Palmieri, who will moderate the debate, will analyze the historical roots of standardization and hospital quality from a historical and organizational development perspective. Standardization of clinical services, both as a management strategy to improve quality of care and as an instrument to improve patient safety,
