In the coming weeks, a Missouri appeals court will decide the fate of James Kriegel, a man who shot his wife and their four children to death in front of their St. Louis home in 2010. A judge sentenced Kriegel to life in prison without the possibility of parole, more than four years ago. Kriegel's attorneys argued that the judge improperly considered a psychological report, which was based in part on a Ph.D. in clinical psychology earned from a college in Poland. But as of Friday, there was no further action on Kriegel's case, according to appeals court spokesperson Melanie Schultz. Kriegel's attorneys also did not respond to a request for comment. Also Friday, Belleville News-Democrat reported that a judge in Nebraska is forcing a woman to take an anti-depressant after she shot a neighbor to death with her husband's handgun at their rural home in August. The story says the woman's attorneys filed a motion asking a judge to reconsider the order requiring her to take the anti-depressant under Nebraska's "emergency contraception" law. However, the judge denied the request. "Traci Jo Saucier's husband, Randy, who has a history of domestic violence, shot her 16-year-old son in the back of the head and then killed her parents, 42-year-old Bryan Saucier and 51-year-old Pamela Saucier, with a .22 caliber handgun, in August 2014 in their home in the rural town of Loup City, Nebraska," according to the report. The judge's order to take the anti-depressant was based in part on a psychiatric evaluation that concluded the woman is depressed and has a history of psychiatric disorders. The evaluation was performed before the slayings. While Saucier's attorneys are asking for a stay to help with her mental health issues, the judge has set no dates to hear arguments on her mental status. In Kriegel's case, his attorney argued that the judge should not consider the psychological exam because it was based in part on a
