It is a new year, we have new goals, we are just about a month into the month, and it's already time to set some new ones. For me, this is about setting new expectations for myself. You see, during my teens, I was a full-blown TV addict. I was busy watching, hoping to be guided by it. It had become my main source of reference for everything in my life. It became a social experiment. Will I become a TV star? That's the first goal I set for myself. What would I wear? Why would I choose this career path? So much of my life was revealed to me by the TV industry. When I was in university, you would have seen me as a busy person, as one who likes to be considered busy in all aspect of my life. During this "self-discovery" period of my life, I met a lot of people. I was the typical social butterfly. You know, the one who always has her nose in books, or the ones who have their nose in books, but their heads are always stuck in online activities (as if they are glued to the computer, and don't have eyes). But there was one good thing about TV and the internet; it provided you to meet new people. It allows you to meet people from all walks of life. But then when I got into my adult life, I guess I lost touch with the TV show that I fell for. I was not a TV actress anymore. I was not showing my face everywhere as I used to. I became a full-time blogger

Each row has a date and a three letter code that is unique to that row.

In some cases, a code will have only two letters and there are some codes that span from two letters to three letters. I am trying to write a macro to open a range of cells for each unique code. The range should be the column where the first letter of the code is equal to the first letter of another row. For example, if I know that BK equals AK in this example, I want to put the value in F12 for the first code in the cells D12:G12. My data sample isn't huge so I can imagine a loop to go through the codes rather than manually copying each line. I just can't figure out the syntax for this. I have tried this: Sub Macro1() ' ' Macro1 Macro ' Range("D12:G12").Select Selection.Copy Range("F12").Select Selection.PasteSpecial Paste:=xIPasteValues Range("D12:G12").Select End Sub And this: For Each w In Columns("D:D").Cells For Each x In Columns("F:F").Cells If w = x Then Range("F12").Value = w End If Next Next I feel I'm really close. I can't figure out how to combine the two loops into a single line where I am 6d1f23a050
