In particular, this invention relates to a push rod that extends substantially perpendicular to the plane of a pedal assembly. Pedal assemblies typically include a pedal, a base plate and a cup shaped pedal holder. When the pedal is stepped upon, a transducer and switch are activated and an electrical signal is transmitted to an electronic system associated with a vehicle. The base plate and pedal holder are typically mounted to a vehicle floor. The base plate is secured to the vehicle floor and the pedal holder is positioned above the base plate. A push rod is secured to the pedal for transmitting the stepping force to the pedal holder. A spring is typically provided for biasing the push rod away from the transducer. In some pedal assemblies, the base plate and the pedal holder are made of metal to provide stiffness and strength to the pedal assembly. In other pedal assemblies, the base plate and pedal holder are made of plastic. In either case c6a93da74d
